Helper Photographer’s ‘Riverwalk Meditations’ on Display at Gallery East

01/14/2019

Gallery East’s first exhibit of the spring semester features photographs by Helper artist and adjunct professor, Jason Huntzinger. The exhibit, “Riverwalk Meditations,” is on display from Jan. 8 through Feb. 2 in Utah State University Eastern’s Central Instructional Building.

According to Huntzinger, this series of photographs was created throughout the summer of 2018, with the inclusion of a couple of autumn images, on the Helper River Walk in Helper. The images were made with an infrared converted camera which extends from the nominal red edge of the visible spectrum. “This creates the effect of glowing foliage and lends itself well to textural mood and an aura of otherworldliness.”

Although the River Walk is familiar with locals and within a stone’s throw from Huntzinger’s home, the shaded path provided an infinite number of visual compositions for his viewfinder.

“The quality of light through the trees in morning and late afternoon here is stunning and on repeated visits to this location I became enveloped in constant variations of light and dark, getting lost in the moment and forgetting subject matter so that the photographs became a meditation through photography in its most elemental form,” he said.

A resident of Helper for the past four years, Huntzinger is an adjunct professor in USU Eastern’s art department and director of the Western Mining and Railroad Museum in Helper.

He has been working with variations and intricacies of light and dark in his photography for 20 years. Throughout most of the past two decades, he lived in the industrial port town of Duluth, Minnesota, where he received his Bachelor of Fine Arts degree in studio art with a photography emphasis.

During that time, he exhibited extensively, including shows at the Tweed Museum of Art and Duluth Art Institute. He also shot photography and album covers for local bands in Duluth, including the critically acclaimed indie legends Low.

He has shown his work in Minneapolis, Seattle, and several other locations with his work part of private collections throughout the world.

Eastern’s Gallery East is free and open to the public throughout the academic year from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., closed weekends and holidays. Huntzinger’s artist reception is Friday, Jan. 25 from 6-8 p.m.

Contact Noel Carmack, at (435) 613-5241 or email noel.carmack@usu.edu for questions about the exhibit or upcoming exhibits.

See also:

Gallery East
USU Eastern Art Department